TABLOID TOUR OF FREDERICKSBURG

[By Thomas Lomax Hunter]

Just before the Civil War, the Fredericksburg was a thriving city of about 5,000 inhabitants. It enjoyed a favorable geographical position. It had transportation facilities both by water and by rail and did business with a rich agricultural hinterland.

Then came the War, and Fredericksburg stood in the very high road of that bitter strife. Situated about half way and in direct line between the Federal and Confederate Capitals, it was almost constantly in the battle area.

No city in the south saw more of the stark bitterness and horror of that War. Great battlefields lie all about it. Indeed from Fredericksburg to Richmond is almost one continual battlefield. The much besieged old city still proudly bears many of the scars inflicted on her in those dark days.

Fredericksburg had its first threat of Federal invasion on the 1st of June, 1861, when some Union gun-boats were defeated in an attempt to land troops at Aquia Creek. On the 11th of April, 1862 the town was occupied without opposition by General Patrick in command of Union forces and experienced its first military rule. From this time on it was successively in the hands of Federals and Confederates. Incessant warfare laid waste the country round until the town was desolate and ruined.

On 11th December, 1862, two days before the impetuous Burnside wrecked his fine army in a mad assault on Marye's Heights, the City of Fredericksburg was shelled by his artillery from Stafford Hills. One hundred and eighty one pieces of artillery stretched on Stafford Heights from Falmouth to the Washington Farm poured their shells into the city at the rate of a hundred rounds a minute. On 13th December, two days after this senseless battering of the old town, Burnside, having put his army across the Rappahannock River on pontoon bridges, attempted by frontal attack to dislodge Lee from his entrenched position upon the range of hills to the south of the town. Time after time the heroic Federal Infantry stormed forward against those impregnable hills, only to be thrown back when human fortitude could endure no more. In this battle occurred one of the greatest infantry charges of the Civil War, when at one o'clock Franklin's and Hooker's grand divisions numbering fifty-five thousand men, were sent against the Confederate position held by Stonewall Jackson's corps. In spite of the withering fire poured into their faces they came on with such impetuous gallantry that they broke through Jackson's line and seemed to have victory in their grasp, when the grim Jackson rushed his reserves into the battle and threw the attackers back in disorder. When the day of carnage was over so thickly did the dead Federal soldiers lie upon the plain before Mary's Heights that it is said one might have walked from the Sunken Road to the City of Fredericksburg upon the bodies of dead soldiers without once stepping upon the ground. The Union casualties at this battle totaled 12,664 and the Confederate loss was 5,337.

For sheer blundering futility and useless slaughter of brave men, this battle was exceeded only by that of Gettysburg.

On Princess Anne Street, near Prince George Street is a part of Marye's Height, has been made into a National Cemetery and upon its beautifully terraced slopes, rest in everlasting peace, 15,294 young Federal soldiers who perished in the bitter conflicts waged about this old town. Of this number 12,294 are unknown soldiers. The unknown soldier is the proper representative of the heroic dead. He it is, whose blood has been shed upon all the battlefields of history.

Every student of the American Civil War must pay a visit to Fredericksburg and its environs. To the battlefields between Fredericksburg and Richmond. One must go, who would make himself familiar with the work of the master strategists in the greatest war the western hemisphere has ever seen.

So well has the healing and effacing hand of time wiped out all traces of the wounds and scars which the war dealt all the animosities of the Civil War seem to her present generation infinitely remote. Secure in her past, Fredericksburg looks confidently to the future. She is making a steady and wholesome growth in population and in industrial wealth.

Fredericksburg has held on to what is precious in the old while adopting what is excellent in the new. Fredericksburg celebrated its two hundred and fiftieth birthday on the 21st of May, 1921 with a beautiful and impressive pageant picturing the great events and important personages who have wended through its history. These men and women in their colonial dress who would have seemed so odd and out of place in some modern town, did not seem such strangers to the streets of old Fredericksburg and one might easily fancy that should the Marquis Lafayette and Baron von Steuben come back tomorrow and find George Washington sitting in the old Rising Sun Tavern the trio would find and feel themselves quite at home. This proud little city has a secure place in history and as a part of Virginia's holy ground a warm spot in the affection of every true Virginian.

TRAGIC ENDING OF AIRSHIP

After Flying All Afternoon at Appomattox Ship And Occupants Consumed By Fire

Four Men Burned to Death. Many Appomattox Citizens Went Up While The Ship was Here Saturday.

[From Lynchburg News.]

Death wrapped itself in flames which burst from a crashing airplane at Preston Glenn airport late yesterday and took a toll of four lives, all men, three of whom were Lynchburgers. The bodies are it would be necessary to hold an inquest.

Clarkson, believed to have been flying the plane, had had seven years and 3,600 hours' flying experience. He was born in Rossland, Nelson county, and received his training in South Carolina. He had been connected with the Lynchburg Flying Service for two years and was considered one of the best aviators in Virginia.

John Adkins, known to his friends as "Jack", was a passenger. He was the son of Mrs. Mabel C. Adkins and the late John Adkins. He was not employed by the flying service for about three months.

The crash was the most tragic ever to occur in this part of the state.

The men were returning from Appomattox about 7:30 o'clock and were attempting to land on the east-west runway at the field. Approaching the runway from the east at a low altitude and at an angle of about 45 degrees, the plane suddenly flipped on its back and dived straight into the ground yesterday. It then started into a grove of trees 250 yards from the field. A black cloud of smoke rose, then a heavenward and the plane, housed into the earth, held its occupants victims.

On the porch of the waiting room at the airport members of Clarkson's family and other friends awaiting the landing witnessed the fatal dive. Above the tops of trees they saw flames at least fifty feet high feeding lustily upon the supply of fuel.

Airport officials rushed to the scene of the wreck to render aid but they were helpless because of the terrific heat surrounding the fire. They could get no closer than thirty feet.

Meanwhile ambulances from Fauber's Mortuary and the city were rushed to the scene and the fire chief and a department truck were called in the hope the blaze could be checked in time to save some of the occupants. But the plane was consumed quickly and nothing was left but the skeleton of wire and four charred bodies.

When the plane left its course it was only 125 ft above the ground and there was no possible chance for the pilot to right it before the crash.

R. D. Apperson, of Lynchburg Flying Service, said last night that the plane was never out of control, that the motor was off, the plane did not stall and that there was no warning beforehand of the impending danger. He described it as the worst crack-up he had ever seen.

The four men left Preston Glenn airport Saturday afternoon about 2 o'clock and flew to Appomattox to take part in exercises at an air field there. They are said to have left there about 7:15 o'clock and one of the fliers said the trip to Lynchburg would be made in twelve minutes.

The plane was a four place cabin model Stinson Junior which was acquired eleven days ago. It was considered the best plane at Preston Glenn and frequently it has been used for sightseeing trips over Lynchburg. It was also used by Lynchburg Flying Service for charter trips.

Mr. Apperson had planned to fly the plane over the city when the four men had landed and was to have taken with him several women, among them Mrs. Apperson and Mrs. Clarence Mattox.

The frame of the burned plane was moved slightly after the accident in order to remove the four bodies. Guards were placed over the wreckage last night and will remain at the scene until officials of the aeronautical division of the department of commerce arrive in Lynchburg to examine it. The department was notified of the crash by Mr. Apperson as soon as possible after it occurred.

Dr. H. P. Brown, Campbell county coroner, viewed the remains and signed death certificates for the four men. He said it would be necessary

Celebrate 25th. Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Jennings celebrated their twenty-fifth anniversary with a reception given on the lawn of their home Saturday evening. The lawn was beautifully decorated with Japanese lanterns and colored electric lights. Miss Ida Belle Evans, Gladys Jennings, Clarkie Evans and Mrs. H. P. Cauthorne, of Roanoke, presided at the punch bowl. The color scheme of orchid, gold and silver was carried out in the girl's dresses and flowers. Miss Dorothy Cauthorne, of Alexandria registered the guests. At nine o'clock Mr. and Mrs. Jennings were remarried. The ceremony being very humerous, was performed by Rev. W. M. Thompson, assisted by Rev. J. E. Waite and Omah J. Burnett. Miss Irene Ellis, of Marion, Va., played the wedding march. At a late hour refreshments were served. The bride wearing a black lace dress with a shoulder corsage of sweetheart roses, cut a huge wedding cake. There were eighty guests present, coming from Roanoke, Church Roads, Pamplin, Lynchburg, Victoria, Appomattox, Richmond and Alexandria.

Local Teams Wins Two Games

In a 14 inning game here Saturday the local boys took a beautiful game from the strong Phenix nine by a score of 6 to 5. The game was considered one of the best ever in years.

On Wednesday our boys went to Phenix and played a couple of games, winning one and losing one, scores, 4 to 3 and 4 to 0.

Saturday, Aug. 15, at the Fair Grounds, at 3:30 the Appomattox will play Phenix. This is a very good well attended
